

A day on the COURSE

1) Golf is one the most unique sports in the worlds. To many, golf is unwinnable. Each time a player takes out their clubs or ties their cleats, they have the opportunity to do something they have never done before. However, sucess in golf is only achieved through incessant practice. The old cliché rings true; practice makes perfect. Before his round, Landon Andre, always hits a couple dozen balls to make sure he ready for the challenges that await.

2) Although golf can be challenging, it is always prudent to stop and take a moment to enjoy the splendour of nature. People become so busy with work, school and family, but golf is a time to have fun, relax and take in the scenery. This is another aspect of the game that makes it so unique. While the game itself can be frustrating and incomprehndable, it can be a stress relief for the everyday person who does not get always the chance to be outdoors often. There is beauty in nature everywhere. If one knows how to use the right perspective they will always be able to see beauty in the little things like the growing grass, the clouds, or rippling water.

3) The young amateur knows that he must balance his round of golf between relaxation and determination. While he knows that golf is a way to take in the nuances of nature, he is also aware of the effort he has to put forth so he can achieve success on the course. Golf is essentially a balance between the mental and physical and that aspect of the game is what makes it so appealing to so many.

4) The outcome of hard work and determination, as well as the right mentality can lead to the satisfaction that comes with well played golf. In this picture, the young amateur hit a ball very close to the hole. Everyone that was playing were laughing, joking and truly enjoying themselves. This combination of on course success and good company is the what makes the game worth playing.

5) After a long hot day, most golfers are tired and worn out. It is important to enjoy time with friends and family and be introspective about the round they just played. Most people ask themselves, has my practice been showing in rounds? But most wise golfers know that tomorrow is another day and the pursuit for excellence and enjoyment that makes golf such a unique and captivating sport.
